CMS Triggers appoints Aaron Banks, a former U.S. Army vet, as US Field Sales Manager-West

From Tactical Wire

CMC Triggers Corp, a pioneer in precision drop-in trigger systems, announced the appointment of Aaron Banks as US Field Sales Manager- West. This strategic hire reinforces CMC Triggers' commitment to high-touch field representation and aggressive market expansion across the Western United States.

Aaron Banks joins CMC Triggers with over 16 years of veteran experience in the firearms industry. A U.S. Army veteran, Banks brings a potent combination of field sales expertise, technical armorer knowledge, and instructional experience. His background is uniquely suited for CMC's mission to provide hands-on, technical support to the front lines of the shooting sports industry.

Throughout his career, Banks has held senior sales roles with Remington Outdoor Company, Beck and Associates, and Primary

Aaron Banks

Arms Government where he successfully led sales growth across multi-state territories. A certified armorer for multiple firearms platforms, Banks has spent years in the field training law enforcement agencies and major retailers in firearms safety, maintenance, and performance applications. In his new role, Banks will be responsible for the "boots on the ground" management of the West territory. His focus will include direct field support, Rep Group leadership, and omnichannel growth.

"Aaron brings the level of experience, discipline, and field knowledge that aligns perfectly with our high-activity growth strategy," said Özge Cumberland, President of CMC Triggers. "We don't just want a sales manager behind a desk; we want a leader in the field who can pull a trigger with a customer and explain the engineering behind it. Aaron's background in both sales and training makes him the perfect asset to lead our West Territory efforts."

This appointment reflects CMC Triggers' ongoing investment in a robust sales infrastructure. By placing experienced leadership directly in the territory, the company ensures that all clients, partners and agencies receive the high-level service and technical expertise associated with the CMC brand.

Outside of his professional career, Banks enjoys spending time outdoors with his wife, and their son, sharing a passion for fishing, community service, and family activities.

About CMC Triggers: Founded in 1982 and based in Fort Worth, Texas, CMC Triggers is a leading manufacturer of precision firearm components, best known for its innovative drop-in trigger systems. Together with San Tan Tactical and SOUSA Optics, CMC Triggers continues to advance firearm technology through precision engineering and American manufacturing from Texas.

PC and FPCA file comments on proposed USPS handgun mailing rule

From Tactical Wire

Firearms Policy Coalition (FPC) and FPC Action Foundation (FPCAF) filed comments with the U.S. Postal Service (USPS) on the proposed "Revised Mailing Standards for Firearms" rule, which would change existing USPS policy to allow "lawful handguns to be mailed under the same terms and conditions as lawful rifles and shotguns." The proposed rule is in response to the January OLC opinion determining that USPS's current prohibition violates the Second Amendment.

FPC and FPCAF filed comments on behalf of the organizations and their members across the country.

The comments were filed on May 4, 2026.

The comments were filed with the U.S. Postal Service in Washington, D.C.

Current law and USPS policy allows individuals to ship long guns via USPS, but unconstitutionally prohibits individuals from shipping handguns. While the proposed rule needs to go further, it represents one step in the right direction of respecting individual's natural and fundamental rights to acquire and transport arms by subjecting handguns only to the requirements applicable to long guns.

"Mailing a firearm is an important part of exercising the right to keep and bear arms. The Postal Service is finally admitting what should've been obvious: ordinary Americans must be able to mail handguns just like long guns. That's a step in the right direction-but the government still can't slap extra fees, red tape, and special restrictions on mailing constitutionally protected arms. USPS's proposal is a good first move because it stops singling out handguns, but it still treats gun owners like suspects with extra costs and hoops. We're pushing USPS to finish the job and end these unconstitutional barriers for good." -Brandon Combs, FPC President

Firearms Policy Coalition (FPC) is a nonprofit membership organization that exists to create a world of maximal individual liberty and eliminate unconstitutional gun control laws.

The Secret Service needs a course correction to ensure President Donald J. Trump’s protection

By U.S. Senator Marsha Blackburn

Every American should be grateful that President Trump, Vice President Vance, Cabinet officials, and the thousands of other attendees at the White House Correspondents' Association Dinner were unharmed during last month's disturbing shooting. It is clear that the shooter attempted to kill the President in yet another assassination attempt on his life since he returned to office. In a manifesto, the alleged shooter, Cole

In a recent letter to Secret Service Director Sean Curran, I demanded answers for these security failures and urged him to conduct a thorough audit of every single employee on the agency's payroll following a string of disturbing personnel issues. Recent reports show that the Secret Service has repeatedly recruited deeply unqualified officers, jeopardizing morale and its critical mission.

Tomas Allen, wrote that he intended to target administration officials, "prioritized from highest-ranking to lowest."

Had it not been for the swift response from brave Secret Service agents, many of the attendees that evening—including the President—could have been seriously harmed. Even so, that a left-wing assassin could infiltrate an event hosting our highest elected officials in the heart of our nation's capital has raised serious doubts about the state of the Secret Service and its ability to keep protectees safe.

Just two weeks before the dinner, the Secret Service failed to locate a gunman who fired off gunshots near the White House. Although officers discovered shell casings near the President's residence, the agency only found video footage of the shooter's vehicle, which had stolen plates. According to Real Clear Politics, that case has now gone cold and the agency reportedly did not fully inform President Trump about its findings.

In a recent letter to Secret Service Director Sean Curran, I demanded answers for these security failures and urged him to conduct a thorough audit of every single employee on the agency's payroll following a string of disturbing personnel issues. Recent reports show that the Secret Service has repeatedly recruited deeply unqualified officers, jeopardizing morale and its critical mission.

Just last week, a seven-year veteran of the Secret Service allegedly followed a woman to her Miami hotel room, making her fear for her life. He was later arrested for indecent exposure after engaging in lewd acts outside of her room. In March, a 28-year-old Secret Service officer was arrested for possession of child sexual abuse material after engaging in explicit conversations with a child. In January, a Secret Service agent recruit was charged in Florida with murdering his 16-year-old brother. And in December, the FBI raided the home of a Secret Service agent on Vice President Vance's detail for allegedly committing millions in tax and wire fraud.

Unfortunately, these are just a few examples of the personnel issues at the Secret Service. Recently, the agency also suspended the site agent responsible for developing the failed security plan for President Trump's 2024 rally in Butler, Pa., after learning that she failed to disclose her marriage to a Brazilian foreign national. Internal investigators are looking into allegations that the Brazilian national overstayed her visa and faced a deportation order. Despite her failure at Butler, the agent has remained on the force, allegedly violating an understanding with the Trump administration that she would no longer work on physical security.

In September, I sent a separate letter to Director Curran calling for the immediate termination of a Secret Service agent who applauded Charlie Kirk's assassination. On social media, that agent, who is responsible for the security of our highest elected officials, wrote that "if you are Mourning [sic] this guy ..[sic] delete me," adding that "you can't circumvent karma."

It is apparent that the Secret Service is in desperate need of a course correction. Unless Director Curran roots out the rot, our nation will suffer the consequences.
