Old Crow Medicine Show to celebrate 17th New Year’s Eve at Nashville’s Rayman Auditorium; December 30 & December 31 shows to feature North Mississippi Allstars

Official Video for “Revolution Now” (featuring Evan Felker) Out Today

August 18, 2026 – Old Crow Medicine Show announced their long-running New Year’s Eve tradition at Nashville’s Ryman Auditorium will continue with shows on December 30 and 31 featuring support from North Mississippi Allstars. The December 31 show will mark Old Crow’s 17th New Year’s Eve performance at the Mother Church. Tickets are now on sale. Visit crowmedicine.com/tour. Along with the news, the two-time GRAMMY-winning string band shares the stirring black-and-white music video for “Revolution Now,” a highlight from their acclaimed release Union Made that features vocals from Turnpike Troubadours frontman Evan Felker. “Lee Oskar and I wrote ‘Revolution Now’ from that feeling that something has to change, even when nobody seems to agree on the way forward,” says band-leader Ketch Secor. “It’s not a song about left or right. It’s about loving this country enough to wrestle with where we are and wonder how we find our way home. Evan Felker brought exactly the kind of honesty and urgency the song needed. ages of Americans working, organizing and standing together through other unsettled times—a reminder that this isn’t the first time we’ve had to figure out how to find our path forward.” Union Made finds Old Crow Medicine Show reflecting on the people, places, and stories of America in its 250th year. Secor recently shared more insight into the band’s ‘love letter’ to America with NPR’s All Things Considered, and the album has garnered praise from Relix, The Bluegrass Situation, BrooklynVegan, Whiskey Riff and more. Recorded in the band’s own East Nashville studio, Union Made is their most collaborative album to date with a Luke Combs co-write and appearances from nearly a dozen guests including Maggie Rose, Molly Tuttle, Del McCoury, Ronnie McCoury, Jesse Welles, Lee Oskar, John Carter Cash and Ana Cristina Cash. Last year, Old Crow Medicine

Show released their first-ever holiday album OCMS XMAS to widespread acclaim from The New York Times, NPR’s Fresh Air and Billboard, with appearances on CBS This Morning, The Kelly Clarkson Show and World Cafe. Secor also released his first solo album Story The Crow Told Me, appeared on Rolling Stone’s Nashville Now podcast, and made his debut as the new host of the long-running Nashville PBS travel and culture series Tennessee Crossroads. His Louder Than Guns documentary is now streaming nationwide on the PBS App and was featured in the latest Rolling Stone print edition. Old Crow Medicine Show will continue to tour this summer and fall, making stops in California, New York, Texas and more. The Potter House redefines what a community owes its young people ... from sports-Ent. page 6

students near back-to-school In the span of just a few weeks, The Potter’s House’s local philanthropic response ministry, TPH Outreach, has launched three distinct but deeply connected initiatives: transforming dorm rooms for foster youth entering college, surprising an incoming University of North Texas freshmen by paying this deserving student’s first semester in full, and awarding college scholarships to high school seniors bound for Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU). On Sunday, August 9th, during the morning service at The Potter’s House of Dallas, a young man learns for the first time that his entire first semester of college has been paid in full by the church. The young student is a dedicated son and student, a soon-to-be mechanical engineering student, and a devoted member of the Firehouse — TPH’s youth ministry — where younger children look up to him as a mentor and role model. He came to the church not with his hand out, but with a question: “how do I make this work without relying entirely on the government?” Cameras are invited to attend Sunday’s service as the announcement is made live. In the weeks ahead, TPH Outreach will also announce a scholarship initiative in partnership with The HBCU Project, awarding five Dallas-area high school seniors with college scholarships to support their enrollment at Historically Black Colleges and Universities. The awards will be presented at the organization’s annual College Fair at the AT&T

Discovery District. Details on recipients and the full scope of the partnership will be announced in the coming weeks. Recently on August 3rd, in partnership with Greater Than Expectations (GTE) and the UNT PUSH (Persevere UNTil Success Happens) program, The Potter’s House co-presented the 4th Annual Freshman Fresh Move-In Day at the University of North Texas — welcoming 10 incoming students who have experienced foster care. Volunteers and professional interior designers transformed empty dorm rooms into fully furnished, personalized living spaces stocked with furniture, bedding, décor, hygiene essentials, school supplies, and food. The North Texas Chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc. joined as a co-presenting sponsor. This year, The Potter’s House of Dallas marks 30 years since its founding. Established in 1996 by Bishop T.D. Jakes, the church has grown into a 30,000-member, nondenominational, multicultural congregation and global humanitarian organization, widely regarded as one of the most significant large-model ministries in the United States. In 2025, Bishop Jakes announced the installation of Pastors Touré Roberts and Sarah Jakes Roberts as co-senior pastors, ushering in a new era of leadership. The transition reflects the church’s commitment to evolving its ministry for the next generation without departing from its founding mission. What has always distinguished
