Tracy Bonham celebrates 30th Anniversary of “The Burdens of Being Upright” transforming raw emotion as felt in “Mother, Mother” video

A classically trained violinist and pianist, Tracy Bonham has undergone a transformation over the last three decades. Her debut album catapulted her into the spotlight, resulting in MTV fame (the "Mother Mother" video was in constant rotation on the channel), major radio play, a featured performer on Lillith Fair, multiple late night TV performances, and more. Her prime positioning in the rock kingdom has afforded her continued pop cultural references, including her music being included in the soundtrack to Bridget Jones' Diary, a regular warm-up gig for Blue Man Group, and more recently Showtime's Yellow-Jackets and Canada's current hit series "FEM."

Now celebrating the 30th anniversary of The Burdens of Being Upright, Bonham is re-recording her debut album from the vantage point of a confident, unapologetic female voice. What once burned as youthful anger is now reclaimed as strength, clarity, and creative power. This re-imagining reframes the songs through lived experience — transforming raw emotion into insight, resilience, and connection. It's not just a return to the music, but a rekindling of the inner fire — a call for young women to trust their rage, honor their instincts, and transform that heat into power, purpose, and something fiercely beautiful.
